Changing Lanes

After a significant hiatus, like a classic car emerging from the garage after a lengthy refurbishment, we are delighted to present a brand-new edition of the AutoDeal Industry Insights Report. Reflecting on our last edition, published over a year ago, we highlighted the automotive industry's road to recovery post-COVID-19 pandemic, anticipating a future where digital transactions would rule the roost.

Little did we know, 2022 had other plans. We were blindsided by low inventory levels, a result of a global semiconductor shortage that led to ready-to-buy customers languishing in waiting-list limbo. This not only tested the patience of our customers but also sent brands, dealers, and online platforms like ours into a spin, as reduced customer turnover impacted transactions for months.

Adding to our adventure, fluctuating foreign exchange rates saw prices increase across all major brands. This shift had a domino effect, leading to a sudden and surprising drop in popularity for top models and leaving fewer options for customers shopping in the sub one-million-peso category. The entry-level buyer market took a bit of a siesta as a result and is only now beginning to wake-up again.

Despite these speed bumps, we've seen remarkable transformations occur throughout the industry. Brands like Hyundai underwent a complete makeover via a Korean-led importer group, MG switched lanes to be fully under SAIC's control, and Chinese newcomers like GAC found new paths under Astara, an internationally known importer group. In the grand highway of the Philippine automotive industry, it seems brands are strapping in for a thrilling journey.

All this activity, we speculate, will be beneficial for consumers. With this level of investment, we might expect not only a convoy of new models entering the market but also potentially better pricing and more enticing offers.

Given the speed of change, we're curious (to put it mildly) to see how the rest of the industry will adjust. Here at AutoDeal, we continue to put the pedal to the metal, working in tandem with our partners to fine-tune the car-buying experience for customers eager to transact online.

We've introduced some snazzy new features, including our auto-loan automation, trade-in options, and a revamp to our secondhand vehicle division. Plus, we've launched our new consumer app on Android, marking our first step into creating a digital, on-demand experience for car buyers.

In this 14th edition of the AutoDeal Industry Insights, we'll spotlight ongoing changes in the industry, highlight the popularity of specific brands and models, and delve into customer journeys on our platform.

To our partners, we extend a hearty thank you for sharing our vision and wish you smooth sailing for the rest of the year.

How popular are China brands?

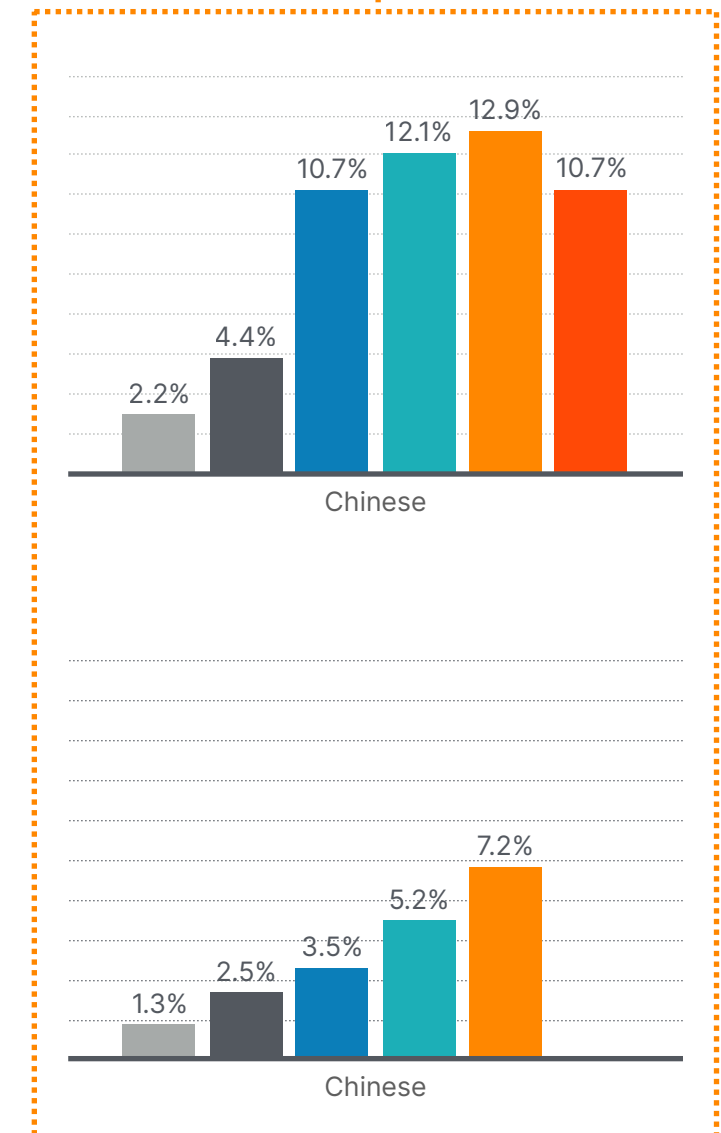

Five years ago, many in the local automotive industry questioned just how deep Chinese brands could penetrate the Philippine market. Over the last five years we've not only seen a notable increase in interest by Philippine consumers, but have seen Chinese brands grow from just over 1% market share in 2018 to over 7% in 2022.

How's your timing?

In my review of data concerning the average lead-to-sale conversion time with our partners, I frequently encounter various questions. While a swift conversion timeline could indicate rapid transaction turnover, it might also suggest a myopic view of the sales funnel, with sales teams prioritizing those consumers more inclined to purchase immediately rather than exploiting all available prospects in their lead funnel. Conversely, extended lead-to-sale conversion times could signify prolonged transaction times, potentially due to supply shortages or extensive waiting lists.

To better understand this, it's essential to analyze transaction times alongside trends in conversion rates. Over the past eighteen months, we've witnessed substantial growth in the lead-to-sale conversion rate achieved by brands on the AutoDeal platform. Specifically, the mean average conversion rate of our top ten converting brands escalated from 5.37% in January 2022 to 7.35% as of June 2023.

Additionally, monthly conversion rates exceeding 8, 9, and even 10% have started to become more regular. We ascribe much of this growth to our enhanced lead-management features, including automated follow-up and appointment setting technology, which continually nurture our partners' lead funnels.

Simultaneously, the average lead-to-sale conversion time remains substantial, typically hovering between 9 and 12 weeks for much of 2023. While this is lower than most of the second half of 2022, it's still notably longer than our transaction times from 2021 and even 2020.

In my perspective, these data suggest positive progress. The lead-management abilities of brands and dealers appear to be improving, leading to not only higher conversions but also remarkable advances in sales volume.

In summary, my revised advice is as follows: if the timeline is lengthening while conversion rates improve, there's not much to be concerned about. However, if the timeline extends and conversion rates deteriorate, it might be time for a more thorough investigation.
